Ewww...Heartworms!

Heartworms are a preventable but potentially fatal parasite that are transmitted by mosquitoes after they bite an infected animal. ALL pets are at risk for heartworms...even those who stay indoors or go outside only every now and then!

Young heartworms (microfilariae) grow into infective larvae in the mosquito's system.

Those larvae then get transmitted to other animals when the mosquitoes feed. As these infective larvae are growing, they damage your pet's blood vessels, making it harder for their heart and lungs to work.

Adult heartworms can live for more than 5 years in dogs and if worms of both sexes are present in your pet's body, they can mate...

starting the cycle all over! Signs of heartworm infection can include coughing, appetite loss and difficulty breathing. Newly infected dogs may show no symptoms at all. There are now several FDA approved medicines for your pet. Your pet MUST receive these medications every month. Make an appointment with your vet!

Smooch a Pooch...

Kiss a kitty? Not a great idea. You see, our pets have lots of microbial flora in their mouths. That's just fancy talk for some seriously yucky stuff and when you think about all the stuff our pets lick and get into...it might be a better idea to show you love with a treat or new toy! Smoooooch!
